WASHINGTON — Key members of House and Senate foreign policy committees have been receiving hundreds of letters a week opposing the Reagan administra-tion's decision to send military aid to El Salvador and expressing concern that the United States might become entangled there in a Vietnam-like war.

The mail, coupled with new public opinion polls, is beginning to have an impact on congressional opinion, according to legislators. In a series of interviews, several members of Congress said that the growing public skepticism about he direction of the administration's policy on El Salvador accounted in part for the closeness of a vote Tuesday on shifting $5 million in funds for military aid to the Salvadoran government. The administration's request was approved, 8-7, by a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee.

Of Cars and Men: French City Fights for Museum

By Jonathan Kandell

MULHOUSE, France - Surely, Balzac, that chronicler of provincial bourgeois sanctimony, would have understood the good Alsatian burghers of Mulhouse.

Five years ago, the business community in Mulhouse was stunned by the news that two of its leading members, the brothers Hans and Fritz Schlumpf, were bankrupt. Indignation followed when workers illegally occupied the Schlumpfs' textile mills, their home and even their private museum of antique automobiles in order to force the elderly brothers to meet severance payments and help find new jobs for the employees.

The workers won their demands and evacuated the properties more than two years ago. But nowadays almost nobody - not the conservative municipal government or the industrial community - seems to have a kind word to say about the Schlumpfs. And a consensus has blanketed this staid, prosperous city that the brothers' collection of 437 vintage cars is really too valuable a tourist attraction to be returned to its owners.

The Schlumpis, living in exile across the Swiss border in Basel, are claiming that their antique automobiles are worth more than 300 million francs (about $60 million). A group of buyers —including the city of Mulhouse, the local chamber of commerce and industry and other private associations — are offering 44 million francs. The money would be turned over to the Schlumpis' creditors to pay off the brothers' substantial debts, and the museum would be opened to the public, hopefully luring the profitable tourist trade from nearby Strasbourg and Col-

A court is supposed to announce a decision in the coming days or weeks. "Either way," noted a lawyer not involved in the proceedings, "no one is going to come out of this affair covered with righteousness." Moral rectitude and certainty have not always been distinguishing traits in the checkered history of Mulhouse. Like the rest of Alsace, the city has changed hands - and loyalties - between France and Germany. A lingering sense of guilt over their sympathies during the last war often sparks protestations of patriotism among Mulhouse citizens. And visitors are told, politely but firmly, that despite the local German dialect, the beer festivals and Tentonic architecture, Mulhouse is as French as Marseilles.

Because the Schlumpf affair has woven together these various strands in the Mulhouse psyche, it has already become an Alsatian saga. Sons of a Swiss father and a Mulhouse mother, Fritz and Hans Schlumpf, now 75 and 77 years old, began their textile business in Mulhouse in the 1930s. Thanks to their Swiss citizenship - they always refused French nationality - the brothers enjoyed considerable freedom of action during the Nazi takeover, and their prosperous mills found clients in France, Germany and Switzerland. At the war's end, a business tribunal briefly investigated their activities under the Occupation, but concluded that they had behaved no better or worse than many other Alsatian merchants and industrialists. The Schlumpf enterprises expanded rapidly in the postwar era, and after buying out the biggest and oldest textile company in the region, the brothers issued a trium-phant communique to the local newspapers in 1971: "Thus has been achieved the plan conceived by Mes-sieurs Fritz and Hans Schlumpf about 34 years ago to acquire, possess and dominate the Alsace wool fiber industry - a goal set forth and imposed by force of will, endurance, perseverance, courage, hardship, concern and

Grudging Respect

Some members of the Mulhouse community considered the press release in bad taste, a sign of arrogance by upstarts who were not even really French. But with success and power came a grudging respect for the Schlumpfs, who in 1976 were awarded "gold medals of enterprise" by the provincial authorities for their business scumen and enlightened management practices. It seems, however, that the real and secret passion of the Schlumpf brothers was not the textile business, but automobiles. They had spent their money hand-over-fist to amass an unparalleled private collection of antique cars — Bugattis, Mercedes, Morgans, Bentleys, Rolls Royces, among many others. By John Vincour New York Times Service

AMSTERDAM - In January, a series of meetings of the Socialist leaders of the small, northern member · countries of NATO began in Amsterdam. The admitted aim of the Dutch organizers was to attempt to stop the alliance's planned deployment of modernized middle-range nuclear missiles at the end of 1983.

U.S. officials, and many of their West German counterparts, regarded the meetings of the so-called Scandillux group — the Dutch, Belgians, Danes and Norwegians — with considerable concern. They thought the movement might gain enough momentum that it could impede the missiles' deployment outside the Netherlands and lead to new public opinion problems, notably in West Germany and Italy, concerning Europe's prime security issue.

Now, after a second meeting of the group in Oslo on March 14 and a conference of European Socialist leaders in Paris last week, the attempt to ealist inter-national support for the Dutch "dropout" position seems at least temporarily blunted. The rhetoric of the Dutch Socialists, who hope to return to power in national elections May 26, has not essentially changed, but there seems to be no inclination among the other countries to join them and their supporters in the ranks of Belgium's Flemish Socialists. Instead, the Dutch Socialists appear relatively isolated and have given hints that they may be dampening their

if you want to have a positive influence over the thing as it develops." This was essentially the line that Mr. Bahr took as a guest in Oslo, where, according to a participant, he said that trying to undermine the NATO position would hinder contacts between the Americans and the Russians.

The attitude of the West German Social Democrats was notable because Mr. Brandt has often in recent months lumped the United States and Soviet Union together as the "superpowers," implicitly suggesting that the rest of Europe ought to try to avoid the tensions they create.

The Dutch position, according to the participant, was also rejected in Paris in sharp terms by Pietro Longo, the president of the Italian Social Democratic Party. His voice, and the Italian attitude in general, is significant because the West Germans have made de-ployment contingent on the participation of other continental NATO powers. The Belgian government, which includes Socialists, has reserved a decision.

The Danes and the Norwegians are not directly involved in the deployment issue, but the Dutch appeared mitially to hope that they might be enlisted in officially questioning its necessity and the need for holding to the alliance's original December, 1979, de-

But this has not taken place. A U.S. official in Oslo said that the Norwegian Social Democratic govern-ment leaders who participated in the meeting there, including Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg, appeared extremely impressed by Mr. Bahr's argu-

A similar attitude seemed prevalent among the Danes, After the original Amsterdam meeting, For-eign Minister Kjeld Ölesen told a visitor that he was disturbed that a representative of the Flemish wing of the Belgian Socialist Party described the new NATO weapons as strategic rather than tactical, a remark that Mr. Olesen said seemed to accept the Soviet arguing point. At the Oslo meeting, according to another participant, Mr. Olesen warned of the dangers of life in the party," said Frederic Soviet exploitation of differences of opinion among the European Socialists.

Remark Notable

The remark was notable because the Danish premier. Anker Joergensen, has tacitly acknowledged that he was the target of a statement by President Valery Giscard d'Estaing of France referring to an unnamed European chief of government "who had expressed neutralist theses" at a European summit meeting. Mr. Joergensen told parisament last week that, the French president's opinion to the contrary, he is a supporter of NATO.

The Dutch Socialists say they are as well, although a man like Klaas de Vries, the chairman of the Dutch parliament's defense commission, who has participated in both Scandilux rounds, told a reporter: "We're missionaries against TNF," - the abbreviation for the modernization program.

The word "missionary" seems well chosen, because the party had approached the issue with evangelical verve. Marten van Traa, the Dutch Socialists' internaverve. Marrien van Iraa, the Driten Schausts interna-tional secretary, who studied with Zbigniew Brzezin-ski at Columbia University in New York, insists that the party is not playing the role of the "useful idiots" for the Russians (a phrase used by Lenin to describe left-liberals and social democrats), but rather is calling attention to the issue of new nuclear arms for the alliance's own good.

For public consumption, the Dutch party's attitude is based on what the party leader, Joop Den Uyl, contends is an East-West balance of power.

"The concept of balance," Mr. Den Uyl said at the Paris meeting, "has in fact become much more clastic Dutch initiative is having.

in a period in which there is a clear overkill on both sides in the field of nuclear arms." Dutch critics of the party, which has said it will block deployment in the Netherlands if it is included in the next coalition government, insist that its stance relates mostly to the party being without a cause in a period when social reform seems winded as a motivating force. "The messianic left dominates intellectual life in the party," said Frederick Bolkestein, a con-

"In a country where religion meant so much, they have been able to infuse the issue with quasi-religious aspects. Everything is seen in terms of 'good' or 'bad'. They are nationalist, parochial, and they want to fix the world and everyone in it."

The Dutch message seems to have gone as far as Karel van Miert, the president of the Flemish wing of the Belgian Socialist Party, who said before the Paris meeting began that the "United States wants to bring everyone into line and will only negotiate after everyone into line and will only negotiate after everyone." one lines up with it. This offensive could have McCarthyite aspects, with everyone who opposes being accused of being an agent of the East bloc. More than ever we've become an American protectorate. We're being treated like vassals."

Evidently, the word that the Dutch might be softening their approach had not crossed the border quickly enough to reach their Belgian ally. In the middle of an election campaign, Mr. Van Traa would hardly acknowledge that the Dutch were pulling back, but he did say, "We're going to be using a more civil tone."

This change, apparent at the Oslo and Paris meetings, was enough for a U.S. official to comment, "There's been a distinct departure from what we

There's been a distinct departure from what we thought might take place when all this started."

The Scandilux group will meet again in Brussels on May 10. By then, there will have been three important NATO meetings — the special consultative group in Brussels on March 31, the nuclear planning group in Bonn on April 7 and 8, and the semiannual ministerial meeting in Rome on May 4 and 5 — which should make clear how much or how little influence the Dutch initiative is broing.

The investigation of Sir Roger took place after his retirement, she can't imagine an old pro like Haig going public with his differences. It's hurt him and the president, too. It was a bellringer they didn't

The irony is that the Resear administration had entered office determined to reorganize the foreign policy network precisely to avoid the kind of internecine warfare between the White House and State Department that had troubled the Nixon and Carter administrations.

Mr. Reagan's solution was to ate he chose last July and proclaim that his secretary of state would be, as he said again Wednesday, "the chief formulator and spokesman for foreign policy in this administration" and to downgrade the role and importance of the president's assistant for national security affairs, Rich-

What the Reagan White House later concluded, as did its prede-cessors, was that it needed a central mechanism for coordinating plans for presidential trips and managing the sudden crises that demand presidential decisions but not the constant hour-by-hour attention of the president.

Recognizing this organizational imperative, the president's advisers felt it most natural to turn to Mr. Bush because Mr. Allen lacked the rank to preside over a committee of Cabinet members.

The alternatives were to use Edwin Meese 3d, the president's counselor, or James A. Baker 3d, the White House chief of staff, but they lacked Mr. Bush's foreign pol-icy experience and they themselves thought it might be "awkward" for White House aides to preside over a Cabinet-level committee in an administration committed to Cabinet government.

Assertive Personality The organizational problem was compounded, in the eyes of the White House, by the assertive, aggressive personality of Mr. Haig, who, as he testified before a congressional committee Tuesday, wanted the same sweeping powers as the "vicar" of foreign policy that John Foster Dulles had enjoy-ed under President Dwight D. Ei-circle became fearful that Mr. Haig would not only overshadow Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, among others, but that, as one White House aide put it, "Haig thinks he's president."

There was rising concern, among the president's three princi-pal aides, Mr. Meese, Mr. Baker and Michael K. Deaver, the deputy chief of staff, that mounting public concern over the way Mr. Haig was handling military aid to El Salvador might burt the presi-dent politically and set back his economic agenda.

"He looks like he's stirring up trouble rather than solving prob-lems," said an important congressional Republican.

The battle over control of foreign policy machinery was joined on Inauguration Day when Mr. Haig submitted a memorandum outlining his concepts for State Department domination of the interagency machinery for develop-ing policy. Senior White House aides, reacting to this as an early "power play," as one put it, circu-lated the Haig memo to other Cab-inet officials with the evident expectation that Mr. Haig's ambitious scheme would be watered down, as it eventually was.

Ultimately, at a meeting in Mr. leese's office on Feb. 25, which Mr. Haig attended along with de-fense, intelligence, and White

Haig given a pre-eminent role. But Mr. Meese said the next day that Mr. Bush would be put in charge of crisis management since the White House situation room, which monitors world trouble for such a function. But State Department officials say they understood differently, that crisis management would be run by the State Department and ultimately by Mr.

Haig. His reasoning was that preparations for emergencies, such as a Soviet invasion of Poland, a new thority were agreed upon, with Mr. in Central America, requires longterm advance planning that must be integrated with the regular conduct of foreign policy by the State Department.

But as White House officials have pointed out, Mr. Haig's ambi-tions to have the State Department take broad charge of diplomacy ran aground on the increasing link of diplomacy with domestic issues handled by domestic agencies.

Mr. Haig became increasingly frustrated and increasingly inclined to try to force a new. although belated showdown over the long-delayed presidential directive

U.S. Lifts Order Against Iranians On Entry Visas

United Press International WASHINGTON - The State Department has lifted special visa restrictions imposed during the hostage crisis that barred Iranians from the United States except for humanitarian or national security

A department spokesman said the restrictions, imposed by former President Jimmy Carter last April, were lifted after a State Department review. The spokesman said the action did not signal a change in U.S. policy toward Iran, which he said was under review at the highest levels.

Mr. Carter's order followed other moves during the hostage crisis, including a requirement that all Iranian students in United States report to immigration officials to confirm that their visas

The spokesman noted that Mr. Carter's order limiting visas for Iranians was issued because of the "continued detention of the American hostages." "This decision [to lift the restrictions] stems from release of hostages, and it was one of the issues re-examined following our review and decisions on the hostage agreements," he added.

But in his wide-ranging conversation Wednesday, he said that economic conditions were too uncertain for Congress to pass more than a oneyear tax bill. He also conceded that lawmakers would like the chance to pass another bill next year, when all House members face re-election.

I think members of Congress would resent being pulled out of the mainstream," he said.

Aside from a few inspired newspaper comments, Algeria has re-frained from official public con-demnation of these U.S. decisions, apparently preferring to write them off as teething problems of a new administration. and Bronco observation aircraft to Morocco, Mr. Reagan's team dropped language justifying the decision as a way to facilitate a peaceful settlement of the Sahara conflict. Algerian officials were not fooled even then, but they noted the omission this time.

By way of explanation, Algerian officials were told that the United States would have announced the tank deal earlier had it not been for the then-unresolved hostage

The Algerian Foreign Ministry officially protested the arms sale, and the next day exiting Ambassa-dor Ulrich Haynes said he hoped the United States would adopt a truly neutral stance on the Sahara.

Aftermath of Crisis

But on the aftermath of the hostage crisis, the Algerians have sworn themselves to complete silence. Algeria now refuses even to acknowledge suggestions that the United States has failed to honor various aspects of the release deal's complicated provisions.

This stance is part of the Algerians' contention that their role was purely humanitarian, intended to help Iran salvage its revolution and in no way designed to curry favor with the United States. To have hoped for special consideration after the hostage release was nevertheless only human.

But, on Feb. 18, U.S. negotia tors arrived from Washington with take-it-or-leave-it proposal for the liquefied natural gas deal. Specialists said the terms were less generous than those previously proposed and Algeria rejected them. The government-controlled media accused the United States of bad faith and using "unilateral rupture" of the negotiations to broadcast Mr. Reagan's hard-line approach on foreign policy.

Specifically at stake in the com plicated negotiations were Algerian efforts to force the United States to accept that gas and oil should be sold at the same price per calorie and U.S. fears that such a concession would trigger price leapfrogging by Canada, the principal foreign source of natural gas used in the United States.

The upshot of the breakdown was that Algeria had no immediate stomers for its $2.5 billion worth of wells, pipelines and liquefaction plants. Its putative U.S. partner, El Paso, wrote off $375 million for last year alone in gas tankers. East Coast customers of companies that spent $700 million on regasifica-tion plants will be paying for them for the foreseeable future in their monthly bills. As seen in Algiers, the Reagan Iministration is in no frame of mind to give presents to prickly, if occasionally useful, countries like Algeria. Ever since the Vietnam war, that is the way many Algerian er to see U.S. Mauritania severed diplomatic no matter how stereotyped such analysis may appear to outsiders.

Ex-Envoy Criticizes Sale

WASHINGTON (WP) - Mr. Haynes, the former U.S. ambassa-dor in Algeria, has sharply criti-cized the Reagan administration for announcing the tank sale to Morocco only two days after Al-geria had played such a major role in helping gain release of the U.S.

SAN SALVADOR — The heavily fortified U.S. Embassy here was attacked for the fourth time this year when about 10 men armed with pistols. rifles, submachine guns and at least one grenade launcher opened fire from two or three directions.

An embassy spokesman said that none of the 100 employees in the building was injured in the attack on Wednesday, which he called the biggest and most coordinated so far.

Telephone calls to local radio stations said that it had been carried out by the leftist Popular Liberation Front to protest U.S. "intervention against the struggle of the Salvadoran people."

A Marine guard on the embassy roof fired one shot, according to the embassy spokesman, while a nearby contingent of Salvadoran security forces also returned the fire.

In testimony before a House committee, Mr. Haynes seemed to suggest that the timing was deliberately calculated to make clear to Algeria that it could not expect more favorable treatment from the United States because of its help in winning freedom for the hostages.

torious — throughout Japan as characters, in a first novel by Xasuo Tanaka, a 24-year-old student. "Nanto-naku Crystal" has cold half a million copies in two sold half a million copies in two months. Its author has become the spokesman for a generation.

Tanaka calls himself only the recorder of these crystal youth. He insists that he is neither nibilist nor satirist. "I wanted to show the tich young generation because there's no novel about them," he said. "I am not condemning or criticizing them. I like brand-name things myself, although I know it's

"I don't disagree with modern Japan, nor do I mean to destroy it. I like it, I agree with it. If's easy to live now. These's no war, no emergency, no demonstrations. There are no serious problems. Professorial

Tanaka speaks at length, like a professor — which his father is — and brooks few interruptions during his remarks on the condition of Japan today. "Let me explain that slowly. There is no lear of death or war or hunger. There will be no change in the near future. Japan is -peaceful and stable. We are rich."

A senior at prestigious Hitotsu-een in the right pubs as theybashi University, Tanaka said he wrote the novel in two weeks, about as long as it takes me to write 10 pages for a seminar." He entered the book in a contest sponsored by Kawade Publishing Co. It won the firm's best first novel of the year award. Published in December, "Nanto-naku Crystal" was a best seller within 50 days. Tanaka has appeared on television, in magazine and newspaper columns, in bookshops through the country autographing his book. A movie based on the novel is in production and is expected to be released in May.

The title of the book cludes translation, meaning "Somewhat Like Crystal," or, literally, "For No Particular Reason, We Are Crystal." Nanto-naku crystal has become a catchword, a slogen for something that is essentially a mood or a feeling of indulgence. In lapan, "crystal" is used as an adjective to mean cool, beautiful, wealthy enough to do as one pleases. Tanaka has caught Japan's current feeling of pride and selfsatisfaction in its affluence, in the luxury that flaunts itself from shop windows and advertisements. "Nanto-naku Crystal", is a short novel, fewer than 150 pages, with an additional 50 pages of notes ex-plaining where the heroine goes, what the English expressions she what the English expressions she tary several times, only to reappear times mean and what music she his later at the Meurice proclaiming

"Yuri's feeling is common to most Japanese girls," said Tanaka. "There's no real model for Yuri. She's an ordinary girl who wants to be happy, not lonely. Sex is not important to her. Keeping one steady boyfriend is. "Every Japanese has to depend on something or someone else, at almost every age. It's difficult to show your identity, that you are you, so you must show who you are through friends, the brands you use, your university, the company you work for. Most modern Japanese are crystal."

Even serious university students sympathize with Tanaka and his haracters. Tanaka-san exaggerates a bit, but not much," said Sokan Hayashi, a medical student "I'd like to continue modeling in my 30s and be a good-looking at Chiba National University. "Yuri is not so different from a

Two Operatic Rarities Staged at Camden Fest

By Henry Pleasants

هكذا من الأصل

ONDON - The borough of Camden's annual festival is traditionally highlighted by the production of operatic rarities, and this year has been no exception, with staged revivals of the Ricci brothers "Crispino e la Comare" and Cimarosa's "Gli Orazi ed i Curiazi" at the Collegiate Theatre and concert performances of Antonio Sacchini's "Renaud" and Puccini's less rare "Manon Lescaut" in London University's Logan Hall.

Both of the staged operas were characterized by that mixture of tedium and richly rewarding epi-sodes that makes certain dated works worth reviving while hardly qualifying them for restoration to the standard repertoire.

"Crispino e la Comare" ("The Cobbler and the Fairy," 1850) was revived at the Wexford festival two years ago, produced in Italian by Sesto Bruscantini, who also sang the title role. Camden has done it in English in a production by Tom Hawkes for Phoenix Opera, conducted by James Judd, who was also the conductor at Wexford.

Opera buffa loses idiomatically in translation, and at the Collegiate one missed, too, the idiomatic defeness of Bruscantini's fine Italian hand in the direction. But there was much to enjoy in the singing of two fine young baritones, Gordon Sandison and Donald Maxwell, and the impudent coloratura of Lynda Russell in a role associated with Adelina Patti.

As at Wexford, this merry but sometimes stumbling send-up of the medical profession peaked in the third (and best) act with a tenor-baritone duet and a buffa patter trio for three baritones worthy of Donizetti at his "Don Pasquale" best. The latter, again as at Wexford, was deservedly en-

Both numbers mark Federico Ricci as superior to brother Luigi as a composer, and one can only regret that he was never moved to make an opera buffa on the domes-tic life of Luigi, who maintained for many years and in many places a menage a trois with twin sister singers, married one of them and wrote an opera for and had a child

Favorite Vehicle

Domenico Cimarosa is remen bered today for an opera buffa, "Il Matrimonio Segreto," but there was a time when "Gli Orazi ed i Curiazi," an opera seria dating from 1793, was a favorite vehicle for such famous castrati as Crescentini, Marchesi and Velluti and such famous prima donnas as Grassini and Catalani.

One recalled this in the production by Opera Rara, as Diane Montague (in the castrato role) and Nan Christie slowly but steadily emerged from the early confusion as to who were the Roman curiazi and who the Alban orazi, rising to the imposing dramatic and vocal challenges of an often splen-did second act to remind us how singers - and as good a composer as Cimarosa — can bring a faded idiom to life, even, as on this occasion, against an unsatisfactory single set and ill-managed staging.

Ailing Salvador Dali Is Trying to Untangle His Chaotic Affairs

By James M. Markham New York Times Service

ADRID - With his business Malfairs in disarray, his health failing and his hands trem-bling so badly that he can no long-er affix a reliable signature to a piece of paper, Salvador Dali is attempting to put some order into the chaos that his life has become.

But new travails besiege the 76-year-old Surrealist. One immediate concern for those involved in the Dali market is the destiny of thousands of blank white sheets of lithograph paper that the artist is known to have signed over the years, when his hand was steady. Last week, in a kind of declararie of associates, Dali issued a statement from his suite at the Hotel Menrice in Paris. "For several years," he said, "and above all since my sickness, there were people who took advan-

tion of independence from a cotetage of my confidence, and my wishes were not respected." An evident target of this statement is Enrique Sabater, a onetime chanffeur and semiprofessional soccer player who rose to become the artist's millionaire private secretary and money manager but who has now fallen out of favor. Sabater has announced his resignation as Dali's private secre-

The artist's bid for an autonomous and organized financial situation threatens to disrupt a global network of makeshift contracts and shadowy companies that have converted Dali into a multimilliondollar industry.

In January, abandoning years of erratic management of his affairs, Dali assigned worldwide defense of his copyright interests to the Paris-based Societe de la Propriete Artistique et des Dessins et Modeles (Spadem), which watches over the Picasso estate. Lawyers for the organization have sum-moned holders of Dali contracts to Paris and have uncovered a wild tangle of documents, at times of dubious legality and in a few cases

Disabled Couple Sets Sail

The Associated Press
CAPE TOWN — A paraplegic comple from Zimbabwe, Peter and Liz Fordred, sailed maided from here Thursday on a planned voy-age around the world in a 42-foot sloop equipped with a hydraulic lift. Their first scheduled stop is the island of St. Helena, about halfway to the coast of South America. The self-taught sailors, both 27 and both paralyzed in accidents before they were married, said they hope to inspire other dis-deep friendship for the aging in open conflict with one another.

The lawyers are trying to determine who indeed owns "world-wide" and "exclusive" reproduction rights to Dali lithographs, statues, jewelry and the like.

Dali has contributed to this anarchic state of affairs. According to a large number of highly reliable sources in several nations, Dali for years signed blank sheets of paper and, in happier times, joked about what easy, profitable work it was. On May 3, 1973, a Paris huissier de iustice, a kind of notary, signed an official document affirming that Dali had signed 4,000 sheets in the

In 1974, French customs police halted a small truck on its way into Andorra carrying 40 such sheets. According to French officials and other sources, the border authorities were unable to take action against their owner, a French art publisher who now lives in Florida, because there was nothing illegal about the sheets. Sources say several sizable depots, including an important one in Switzerland, con-

The implications for the value of existing Dali lithographs are enormous, highlighted by the recent surfacing of purportedly false Dali lithographs in California, Canada and Italy. A former associate of the painter recounted that "on a good day" Dali was capable of signing 1,800 sheets in an hour, aided by three attendants who moved the papers as the master dashed off his signature.

Unlimited Series

Control of stocks of signed blanks would permit the easy muluplication of lithograph series that are supposedly limited in number. A genuine Dali signature, moreover, could convert a work of "art" with which he had little or nothing to do into a Dali "original."

According to art-world sources in Paris, the availability of the signed blanks is related to a number of curious contracts that Dali and his 87-year-old, Russian-born wife, Gala, concluded last fall in a $1.3-million blitz of business at their seaside home on the Costa Brava in Spain. At the time, the artist was recovering from a deep depression and a variety of ailments that have since been diagnosed as Parkinson's disease.

Hamon, an important Paris graphics dealer, conceding worldwide rights to turn out "lithographs or engravings" or lithograph-like reproductions from color slides of Dali oil masterpieces, which in some cases the artist would mark with a special stamp bearing his One contract, $50,000 to Dali for "lithographs" of his painting "The Great Masturbator," states that this stamp, which will be the equivalent of his signature, will be the exclusive property of . . . Hamon, and in no case can be used by anyone else." Hand-written into the one-page document is:

Though his painting days are now clearly behind him, Dali signed 11 contracts with Gilbert

"The stamp will be the property of Salvador Dali." A Dali thumbprint seals the contract. A prominent figure in the French art world who has acquired one of the Hamon productions an acquisition made for legal, not artistic, reasons -- described it as a color photograph, bearing a Dali signature and sprinkled with gold flake. It sells in Paris for 750 francs, or about $153.

An Unhappy Mr. Haig

When Cyrus Vance resigned as secretary of state last May in the wake of the failed hostage-rescue operation in Iran he did so after much agonizing. It was not simply that he disagreed with the president about the wisdom of the raid, although that might have been enough. It was that his judgment on a critical policy matter was rejected after three years of squabbling with the president's national security-adviser, Zbigniew Brzezinski. Mr. Vance did not lose all the battles. He won some and there were many awkward compromises. It can be argued that Mr. Vance was wrong about the raid and wrong to resign. But when he did leave, it was over a substantial affair of state, it came after more than three years in office, it involved legitimate moral and practical considerations and it was done with grace, dignity and profesşionalism.

President Reagan promised during his campaign that he would put an end to the system that spawned the battles between Mr. Vance and Mr. Brzezinski. He guaranteed that there would be only one spokesman other than himself on foreign policy. When he selected Alexander M. Haig Jr. to be secretary of state, he designated the former deputy national security adviser and NATO commander to fill that slot. Mr. Reagan was comfortable with Mr. Haig's foreign policy posture. But it turns out he didn't know too much about the former general's style. Mr. Haig, like a powerful vacuum cleaner, pulls into his orbit everything that is not firmly attached elsewhere. He is an autocrat in an administration that puts a premium on consensus and he thus remains something of an outsider.

As a result of this conflict in style between the president and those close to him and Mr. Haig, there were difficulties from the beginning marked by crudeness on both sides. First, the president imposed a deputy on Mr. Haig. It is the president's prerogative to name deputy Cabinet secretaries, but it would have been better if Mr. Reagan and Mr. Haig could have found someone closer to being mutually acceptable than William Clark, a California judge and Reagan crony who was ignorant of even the basics of foreign policy. Then, almost before Mr. Reagan knew where his desk was, Mr. Haig slapped a memorandum on it proposing a reorganization of the government's foreign policy machinery that would have put all the power in the secretary's hands.

Each time Mr. Haig thought he was losing a bureaucratic battle, he began muttering about resigning. At the same time, there was muttering at the White House about how the secretary of state was upstaging the president and his economic program by his forceful and repetitive presentation of foreign policy issues, especially El Salvador. Then, last weekend, nationl security adviser Richard Allen made a speech criticizing Europeans for being soft on Communism. Mr. Allen's role, it was understood, was going to be as a coordinator, not an articulator of policy, especially in a sensitive area of special concern to the secretary of state.

Finally, the denouement: Mr. Haig went public with his unhappiness about the prospects of Vice President George Bush being named foreign policy crisis manager with NSC staff support, and he also made a grab for control of auto import talks with Japan, to the apparent dismay of Japanese foreign minister Masayoshi Ito. The next day Mr. Bush got the crisis job and Mr. Haig, who said he wasn't consulted, went straight up the wall in anger. Mr. Reagan's counselor Edwin Meese and White House chief of staff James Baker were equally furious at what they considered Mr. Haig's indiscretion.

Unlike the Vance case, this was a clash over power and style, not substance and duty. It has to do with egos and turf fights, not high purposes of state. And it isn't over. According to all reports, Mr. Haig is still very angry and so is Mr. Meese. Much of the battle has already been fought gracelessly in public. It is an unbecoming spectacle and it holds little promise for the carrying out of a clear, consistent foreign policy. President Reagan looked fine and manly with his spurs on Wednesday when he tried to soothe the secretary of state and persuade the people that the press had cooked up the Haig-White House feud. But he will have to do a lot better than that if he is going to avoid having the credibility of his administration shattered both at home and abroad.

mains hidden from fuzz on the Hill and the peachfuzz in the galleries, is brewing between the Cap the Knife and Casey families. Casey's National Intelligence Estimates report on potential enemies, and do not evaluate U.S. forces; Bobby the Underboss wants to include U.S. defense potential in his rehas flowed in the streets of Poland. And for the first time since the 90day truce initiated at the request of Premier Wojciech Jaruzelski in February, Lech Walesa, the head of the independent union Solidar-ity seems to be losing his influence to prevent a strike.

If the assault of police brutality in Bydgoszcz took the country by surprise, the subsequent nationwide anger was to be expected. The situation in Poland is now. therefore, serious and alarming.

The Communist Party and the government of Poland are not used to obeying laws or to respecting the rights of citizens. It would thus be naive to expect either the party or the government — after 35 years of absolute power — to stand by and watch its power and its privileges disputed and eroded.

No Coincidence

In what certainly was no coincidence, the attack in Bydgoszcz took place about 48 hours after the agreement in Radom that prevent-ed a general strike from breaking out throughout an entire region. That agreement put an end to the taboo that guaranteed immunity from punishment to members of the party and the government for acts committed under official or-

In Radom, the heads of three high officials have just been offered to an angry population, those of the chief of the regional Communist Party, of the administrative director and of the chief of police.
This, of course, was not the first time that the party had sacrificed scapegoats in the name of order, but it was the first time that offi-cials were fired without being accused of theft or corruption or even abuse of authority.

Up to then, the law of the Nomenklatura — that is: the rules under which the Communist Party named and ousted high officials seemed to be forever intangible. These rules, which made those chosen invulnerable and guaranteed that the party elite would always be maintained in their posts are the very foundation of the Communist system. They appeared to be so untouchable that they were not even questioned in the Gdansk accords.

At an End

The victory in Radom put an end to this invulnerability of officials and was the first chink in the armor of the Nomenklatura; the chosen, the elite immediately saw the danger. This meant that Polish officials would not have to accept new principles of conduct and that they would have to answer for their past activities not only to the government, but the nation as well. The three officials who were fired in Radom lost their jobs for their

There are three kinds of executive agreements. The first is done pursuant to an act of Congress, of which an example would be trade agreements entered into under the authority of the reciprocal Trade Agreement Act of 1934. A second are executive agreements made by the implicit exercise of power granted to the president by the Constitution, an example of which are arrangements entered into by President Roosevelt at Tehran, Casablanca and Yalta, while exercising his authority as commander in chief.

A third is an agreement made by a president serving in his capacity as chief administrative officer whom subordinate officers are logically expected to obey. President Monroe, our hero of the hour, pro-mulgated the Rush-Bagot Agreement with Great Britain for laying up of warships in the Great Lakes. President Theodore Roosevelt agreed, in negotiations with Santo Domingo (now the Dominican Republic), to look after its financial affairs, and President Wilson, in the Lansing-Ishii Agreement of 1917, recognized the special inter-ests of Japan in North China.

WASHINGTON — Reports regarding hostilities in Samar show there has been much more trouble in the Philippines than is generally known. The statement that the fighting was caused by a treacherous attack made by natives who had come to surrender is the first intimation that natives were waging war. The impression is gaining ground that a censorship, or its equivalent, is in operation in the Philippines and that only such military news as Maj. Gen, Wood deems advisable reaches the United States. There has evidently been much bloodshed. Mr. Curry, governor of Samar, reported missing in the recent fighting, has been found. He says he is proceeding to pacify the island.

Japan Asked To Cut Back Car Exports

U.S. Requests Limit Of 1.6 Million Autos

From Agency Disputches
WASHINGTON — The Reagan
dministration has informally told Japan that it expects Japanese automakers voluntarily to limit exports to the United States to 1.6 million vehicles this year, down from 1.9 million in 1980.

The message, delivered through Ambassador Mike Mansfield, precedes what will be a formal request for a sharp curtailment in car shipments, White House sources said. That statement will be delivered next week, after Japanese Foreign Minister Massyoshi Ito reports to Tokyo on his five days of talks in Washington earlier this

On arrival in Tokyo, Mr. Ito said, however, that he did not ex-pect the problem to be solved through government negotiations. "I don't know what the next step will be, but there are no plans for formal talks," he said, adding that he made no promises that Japan would take unilateral action to ease trade friction caused by surg-ing auto exports. Mr. Ito said Mr. Reagan appeared very con-cerned about the possibility that protectionist measures would be

Reports from Tokyo Wednesday indicated that the powerful Minis-try of International Trade and Industry (MITT) has decided to go along with a 1.6-million limit on this year's exports to calm U.S. sentiment, but cautioned that the government would still have to persuade recalcitrant automakers. Meanwhile, Japanese Foreign

From Agency Dispatches
NEW YORK — After an early rally Thursday, prices on the New York Stock Exchange closed lower in active trading due to profit tak-

The Dow Jones industrial average, which climbed 19.09 points Wednesday to an eight-year high, was off 9.46 points to 1.005.76 at the close. Declines led advances by a 9-7 margin: turnover was 60.9 million shares, up from the 56.3 million traded Wednesday.

Prices were mixed in moderate trading of American Stock Ex-

Analysts said they were not surprised that the market was encountering profit taking because the Dow average, which first broke through 1,000 on Nov. 14, 1972. had gained more than 83 points since hitting its 1981 low of 931.57 on Feb. 13. Through Wednesday, it was up 22 points for the week.

Brokers also said hectic trading at the outset Thursday drove some investors to the sidelines until they could get a clearer picture of the market's trend.

Traders seem to be convinced interest rates will continue to fall. Several major banks have lowered their prime lending rate a balf

Investors also appear to be discounting a recession and looking ahead to a stronger economy either later this year or early in 1982. Wall Street is encouraged by President Reagan's handling of his economic proposals that call for tax cuts and spending reductions.

New York Federal Reserve Bank President Anthony Solomon said Thursday that he sees no likelihood of a recession this year. In remarks after a speech to the Financial Analysis Federation, he said that even though there are some weak sectors of the economy. a recession seems impossible, citing "a very substantial boost from the increase in defense spending" and strong capital and plant spending.

But he also said that tax reduc-

East Bloc Debt To West Said to Grow $7 Billion

GENEVA - East European borrowing from the West reached some $7 billion in 1980, putting the cumulative total at an estimated $67 billion at the end of last, year, the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe reported Thursday.

Poland's cumulative debt to the West was said to be $21 billion. accounting for almost one-third of the region's total. This included $15 billion in credits from commercial banks, the ECE said, estimating that the total Soviet debt was next largest at $14 billion. The commission estimated that Soviet gold sales dropped in 1980. "perhaps to less than 100 metric tons," compared with 290 tons in 1979 and 450 tons in each of the preceding two years. This decline was linked to rising oil prices, which enabled the Soviet Union to pay for imports from the West with petroleum and gas sales, the ECE said. It also noted that borrowing from commercial banks accounted for nearly 70 percent of Eastern Europe's debt to the West, but that the loans totalled only about 10 percent of the banks' publicized Eurocurrency loans.

1980 profits. He said the drop in interest carnings more than offset an increase in commission earnings. Commerzbank, West Germany's third largest bank, saw net profit fall to 34 million Deutsche marks from 142 million DM in 1979, he He said the average interest margin in 1980 was only 1.4 per-centage points, after 1.75 in 1979

He said Commerzbank planned to devolve long term new lending to its mortgage bank subsidiary, Rhemische Hypothekenbank. This bank performed well in 1980, increasing its net profit to 46.5 million DM from 44 million DM, with 32.5 million DM of this being paid into free reserves, compared with 30 million DM in 1979.

Mr. Lichtenberg said if the bank succeeds in its aim of keeping in-terest margins within 1.6 to 1.7 points this year, the surplus should optimism. In the first two months increase by between 150 million this year Commerzbank was clear- and 200 million DM, even on the cent investments appear to stem from foreign pressures, although the company does not talk about them that way.

Italy, for example, will allow only 2,200 Japanese cars a year to be imported, France appears to have set an informal limit of 3 percent of its car market for Japan, and Britain has warned Japan not to take more than 10 or 11 percent of its car sales.

Nissan will get inside the European Community's trade walls by building cars there. Eventually it will build 200,000 small cars a year in Britain and will produce medi-um- and small-sized cars in a joint venture with Italy's Alfa-Romeo.

Trucks in Tenne Nissan's plan to build a pick-up truck factory in Tennessee also may have been a result of an increase in U.S. import duties. Whatever the causes, the new era has taken Nissan far from the period when it built cars here and watched them float away from Japanese docks to the far corners of the world. Pressures from developing countries forced the compa-ny to build assembly plants abroad and ship knocked-down versions that are put together overseas by local labor. This year, 200,000 unassembled cars will be shipped. "For a long time, we assumed we could not make money over-seas," a Nissan official commented recently. "That is not the easiest way. Physically, it's easier to make cars here and ship them abroad. But in the long run, that would cause a lot of problems."

The Board of Directors' report analyses recent economic developments. It explains the reasons which make the necessity to invest essential, deals with the ways in which investments may be financed. and discusses the problems relating to the rôle of holding companies and the reactivation of the equity capital market.

The report further contains information on the trading results and activities of the companies belonging to the Société Générale group, both in Belgium and throughout the world. It tells of the strengthening of the Société Générale de Banque's resources through the issue of a floating rate subordinated loan on the international market of 100 million U.S. dollars, of the development of Sofina's subsidiaries, of the structural changes within the CMB shipping group to match its development, and of the expansion of Genstar in the United States. It reports on the growing volume of work which Traction et Electricité's engineering consultancy division has in hand and in the mechanical and electrical engineering fields, on the penetration of new markets by ACEC, BN and Fabrique Nationale (FN). It covers the diversification policies and research programmes implemented by PRB, Union Carbochim. Minière, Métallurgie Hoboken-Overpelt, Vieille Montagne, Prayon and their subsidiaries in the chemical and non-ferrous metals sectors. Finally, such varied sectors as steel, diamonds (Sibeka and its subsidiary. Diamant Boart), textiles (UCO), paper (Papeteries de Belgique), etc., are also reviewed.

'Frisbee Diplomacy' to Contribute New Twist to U.S.-China Relations

OAKLAND, Calif. — Ever since cartoonist Garry Trudeau was spotted playing Frisbee on the Great Wall in 1975, the Chinese have been curious about the sport. So in June, a group of 25 Americans devoted to tossing the plastic

MIDNIGHT'S CHILDREN

By Salman Rushdie. Knopf. 446 pp. $13.95.

Reviewed by Anita Desai

TT is the Indian paradox that the total absence of protective, humanizing and developing factors somehow does not annihilate or destroy life but that life continues to proliferate and proclaim itself everywhere with stridency, vitality and inextinguishable vigor. It is the earthly reflection of the Hindu conception of God as combining the aspects of the Destroyer, the Creator and the Preserver.

Since the subject of Salman Rush-die's novel is the progress of the political juggernaut through the Indian subcontinent — the juggernaut being literally a religious procession taken through the land in celebration, although said to leave behind a wake of destruction — one might expect a dark and somber treatise. It is nothing of the sort. On the contrary, "Midnight's Children" burgeons with life, with exuberance and fantasy. It has the same effect on the eyes and the ears as a magnificent circus performance - a scene that is brilliant with color, zest, daredevilry and loud bra-vado. The language is as full and copi-ous as a flood or fire of tremendous proportions. If "Midnight's Children" is sprawling and untidy, then it shares these characteristics with such natural phenomena. If there are many deaths and acts of destruction in the novel, then every death seems merely to fer-tilize the Indian soil so that 10 heads spring up in the place of the one that rolled. If the last third of the book reveals a dwindling of the creative spring, then this is part of the great design, for by then Rushdie's hero claims to be "disconnected, unplugged, with only epitaphs left to write" and ends, resignedly: "New myths are needed; but that's none of my business.

Before ending on that elegiac note, Rushdie has painted a full portrait of India, the new myth — a collective fiction in which anything is possible, a fable rivaled only by two other mighty fantasies: money and God." He uses the name India for the whole subcontinent and spans the recent history, both told and untold, of both India and Pakistan as well as the birth of Bangladesh. Yet one hesitates to call the novel "historical" for Rushdie be-lieves — like Guenter Grass whose work is, one feels, the chief influence here (two of the characters even bear the Grasslike names of Oskar and Ilse Lubin) - that while individual history does not make sense unless seen against its national background, neither does national history make sense unless seen in the form of individual lives and histories.

The Pickles of History

Like a Grass hero, Rushdie's Saleem is a very private person linked willy-nilly to events of national importance — in this case, by the accident of his birth coinciding exactly with that of the Indian nation, for he is born, along with 580 other babies, on the stroke of midnight on Aug. 15, 1947, while Nehru is intoning his famous speech ("Long years ago we made a tryst with destiny . . ."). The history of Saleem's family, which orig-inated in the valley of Kashmir and later migrated to Agra, then to Bom-bay and then finally across the border to Pakistan, is shown in the first third of the book as inseparable from the history of the country — as indeed any life is. Yet nothing is predictable — the fantastic and the earthy follow each other about in a cosmic dance, as do the tragic and the farcical. Rushdie continually plays tricks on the reader. For instance, he switches babies about in the maternity ward on that historic night so that Saleem's ancestors are really not his ancestors although they are of his adopted son. He can also veer off on wild tangents, as in his piece on the influence of hairstyles on piece on the influence of hairstyles on the course of history or his vision of history as a pickle jar. "To pickle is to-give immortality," he says and adds: "One day perhaps the world may taste the pickles of history. They may be too strong for some palates, their smell may be overpowering, tears may rise to the ever. I have nevertheless rise to the eyes; I hope nevertheless that it will be possible to say of them that they possess the authentic taste of truth . . . that they are, despite everything, acts of love." R patited a himself does not lack that indish blur onsihimself does not lack that indish our said: ble ingredient of the satirist's it dotos said: the gift of love, of concern asection volvement without which his isia an comwould have little meaning at them a ragedy.

BRIDGE

BIDDING theorists have tended in-D creasingly to use low-level dou-bles to request partner to act rather than to look for a penalty. But it is important to distinguish clearly between the two types of doubles. Nothing is more annoying than to have partner remove a double intended for penalty, thus saving the opponents from disaster, or to have him pass a takeout double through misunderstanding giving the enemy doubled overtricks.

One major type in this category is the negative double, devised by Alvin Roth in the 1950s. When an opening suit bid is overcalled with another suit bid, up to an agreed level, a double is negative and suggests some length and strength in the unbid suits.

Similar in some respects is the responsive double, devised by F. Fielding-Reid. This applies, with a similar meaning, when the opening bid has been raised in the face of a double or overcall, and the fourth player doubles. A typical example is one spade double—two spades—double.

A useful 64-page monograph on this specialized topic has been published recently. It is "Negative and Responsive boubles in Bridge." by Harold Feldheim. The diagramed deal, from the book, is a good illustration of the value of the negative double. Using traditional methods, North is in trouble with the hand shown after a one-diamond opening is overcalled with one spade; pass, one no-trump and two clubs all have major disadvantages. The dou-ble, promising moderate values and, in this situation, at least four cards in East should no doubt have bid four South Africa because of apartheid South Africa has been expelled from the International Olympic Committee and most major sports federations.

Although only a month old, the blacklist has already bitten deep into South Africa's internationl sporting ties and threatens to throw the country back into sports isolation at a time when it was on the verge of breaking out.

An estimated 100 countries, mostly in the Third World but inclinding the Netherlands and Sweden, have said they would abide by the blacklist. Many of the athletes on the list have have said they would not return to South Africa because of it.

"It has hurt us already — we know that," said Wilf Rosenberg, a boxing promoter who staged the Mike Weaver-Gerrie Coetzee and works, it will stop our coetzee-John Tate world heavyme dead," said a proanoth African sportswriter.

Beaumont Withdraws

the Gleneagles agree- But in the meantime the price e member countries of the paid by South Africa continues to rise. English national rugby captain Bill Beaumont has withdrawn from a benefit match scheduled in Bloemfontein next month: most of the foreign golfers on the Sunshine tour have quit the circuit; the South African Open Tennis championship is devoid of international entries, making it an almost all-local affair, and an Australian cricket chib has canceled a tour.

"When this thing first came out people here thought it was a joke. They are not langhing anymore, that is for sure," the sports editor of a local newspaper said. "Up to now South Africa has succeeded in buying sporting friends, but now the price is too high," said Hassan Howa, head of the black-oriented South African Cricket Board. "We support the list while the existing system of control in South African sport persists."

South African rugby boss Dame Craven said the blacklist had little chance of long-term success.

Navratilova to Meet a Note-Taker

By Neil Amdur New York Times Service

NEW YORK - On court changeovers, some tennis players bury their heads in towels. Others study faces in the crowd. Leslie Allen writes notes to herself.

Wednesday, after she had lost the first game of the second set to Hana Mandikova of Czechoslovakia, Allen walked to her seat and wrote "Be confident" alongside such earlier notes as "You can get your first serves in" and "How many more points are you going to give away?"

Allen's formula for keeping her game in focus resulted in a surprising 7-5, 6-1 victory over Mandlikova on the opening day of the $300,000 Avon women's tennis championships at Madison Square

Martina Navratilova, who plays Allen in Thursday night's second round of the five-day double-elimination tournament and Andrea

Jaeger and Sylvia Hanika also won. But not even Navratilova's 3-6, 6-l, 6-3 comeback against Pam Shriver in a brisk serve-and-volley duel carried the impact of Allen's debut as the first black player to qualify for a major series playoff on the women's tour.

The significance was not lost on Allen, a 24-year-old New Yorker who recently bought a 12-room brownstone on West 139th Street with her family. She said, teasingly, that she envisioned headlines like "New York Harlem Girl Comes Downtown to Garden and Gets Blown Out" if she flubbed her coming-out party.

"My major job is to go out and play tennis first," she said, echoing words stressed by Althea Gibson and Arthur Ashe in earlier initiations as black stars in a predominantly white sport. "I can't ignore the outside world, but I can't be out waving lots of banners if it's going to distract me on the tennis court."

Allen had beaten Mandlikova, the 1980 U.S. Open runnerup, in two previous meetings. But those ments, not an eight-player, seasonending show. And they were not at 10 o'clock in the morning, when the first of four matches was played because the Garden was needed for Wednesday night's National Invitation Tournament bas-

56% of First Serves

Mandlikova, managing only 56 percent of her first serves, was two points from taking the first set serving at 5-4 deuce. She dropped the next two points and three games, then wandered through the second set, unable to hold serve.

After a year that saw her catapult to the top five in the rankings and win the season-long Colgate bonus pool, Mandhkova had an uninspired winter tour. Even with Tracy Austin injured and Chris Evert Lloyd resting, she won only one event, losing to Hanika in the quarterfinals of the last two events.

Allen's notes and No. 24 ranking are signs that her 5-foot-10-inch frame and serve-and-volley style may be coming together. "Sit ting there gives you complete focus," she said of her unusual mental strategy. "Maybe I'm sitting here and I'm saying. 'Hey, I'm playing in the Garden.' Instead of being awed, I'll write down things like 'Get your first serve in.' or Watch the ball. It's reinforcing something you already know."

Allen was among seven new-comers in the draw. Barbara Potter could have benefited from such mental reminders in her 6-0, 6-2

NBA Conducts an Opinion Poll on Some Old Rules

I speak of dinner because ever since our acquaintance turned into a corporation we have been worrying at our house about how to deal with him next time he comes for a meal. There - right there in that sentence above - I have already stumbled over one of the problems. I referred to "him" and "next time he comes for a meal." Can you call a corporation "him"

A corporation is surely "iL" But will our friend be offended by the neutering? "Have I not eyes that weep and mouth that screams when they tax me?" it might ask. And yet, if we call it "he," the IRS might very well argue that the incorporation has failed. Nobody calls General Motors "he."

This man of whom we are talking telephoned shortly before his tamorphosis to suggest that L too, consider the tax advantages of becoming a corporation. national Herold Tribune ONDON - By the end of L this year, it's expected that more than I percent of the world's population will have a love-hate relationship with Rubik's Cube. They will love the little Hungarian puzzle because of its extreme challenge, and hate it because they cannot solve it.

Finding it is almost as difficult as solving it. In the United States, where it is the nation's best-selling puzzle, and in West Germany and Japan, cube fever is rampant and stocks are low. Ideal Toy Co., which manufactures and imports Rubik's Cube for the United States, Europe and elsewhere, hopes to catch up on the order backlog by summer.

The basic idea for what is being called the toy of the century was evolved in about a month in the late spring of 1974 by Emo Rubik, a professor of architecture and design at the Academy of Applied Arts in Budapest. He wanted something to help his students comprehend three-dimensional problems.

Cubes on Pivot

What he came up with was a 24-inch cube, each of whose six faces is made up of nine smaller cubes. At the center is a sort of pivot around which each of the six faces can be turned. In the "start" position, each face is a different color, but this changes when any face is rotated around the central pivot. The puzzle is how to restore the cube from any random color pattern to the original, making each face a single color. Five turns will hopelessly scramble the colors for anyone but the most expert cubist.

Rubik says he took about a month to solve his puzzle the first time. Some experts advise cube holders that they will spend anywhere from five hours to a year solving the puzzle, if at all. It is accepted that "fiddling" with Rubik's Cube will not lead to a solution. You have to devise a method Mathematicians, computer experts and professional people in general have lauded Rubik's Cube as one of the most educational toys ever invented. It is being used in the United States for vocational aptitude testing.

The main source of cubist knowledge is David Singmaster, self-annointed "cubemeister" to the world. Singmaster, 42, first saw the cube at an international mathematics congress in Helsinki in 1978. He was immediately smitten, and his home in south London has become a clearing house for the growing cube cult. His 70-page booklet, "Notes on Rubik's 'Magic Cube,' " is in its fifth edition and is considered to trouble keeping up to date on the latest developments in cubistics. How-To Book be the best work on the subject, though Singmaster admits he has

"My book doesn't just tell you - it makes you understand how to do it," said Singmaster, who holds a Ph.D. in mathematics from the University of California at Berkeley. He has taught for 12 years in London at the Polytechnic of the South Bank.

At first Singmaster sold the cubes in Britain, but now he concentrates on buttons (the most popular has a picture of a cube and carries the words "Smi You've Done It Recently") and

Behind all the hoopla, he is still overwhelmed by "this re-markably rich toy," which he called "fascinating at all levels of math - transformations, group theory, permutations, symmetry, It taxes your mind, but you also get a feeling for the physical ob-ject. I remember a lot of the movements by feel, not vision Singmaster may claim to be the world's most knowledgeable cubist, but not the fastest at solving the puzzle, which has 43,252,003,274,489,586,000 possible combinations. His average times is three minutes. The current record is held by Ronald Brinkmann, a German, who has done it in 24 seconds.

'God's Algorithm'

Another challenge is discover-ing the least number of moves possible. It is reckoned to be 19 and already has a name — "God's algorithm" -- but no one has yet achieved it.

The best-known procedure for solving the cube comes from league of Singmaster, who used a computer to develop the tech-nique. His algorithm (a step-by-step procedure for solving a math problem) takes, at most, 52 moves. "Every real cubist devises his own algorithm or at least makes some changes to previous algorithmus," said Singmaster. He offers one solution in his booklet. Ideal Toy Co. also sells a version in a $2 booklet and several German magazines have come up with their own.

'Impossible' Patterns

Once solved, and perhaps a second or third way discovered or borrowed, what then? There is a vast amount more to go on to," said Singmaster. Beautiful patterns are discovered and recorded letters replace colors to form words; one man puts nudes on the faces and matches up their navels.

Then there are the "impossible" patterns — impossible because, in order to achieve them, you disassemble the cube and put it back in a different order. In so doing, Singmaster said, you discover the elegant simplicity of the Rubik Cube's inner mechanics - far superior, Singmaster

- at least 29 varieties - he has heard about.

In his writings, Singmaster has suggested an "impossible" practical joke — "a very subtle form of malice that one can carry out on 'friends.' One either dismantles their cube and reassembles it incorrectly or one rearranges a few of the colored squares in an 'impossible' pattern.

While cubists devise variations on a three-dimensional theme, Rubik, 37, has not been forgot ten. After inventing the cube, he sold the idea to a Hungarian toy manufacturer who called it the Magic Cube. Rubik applied for a national patent, but not an international one. When Ideal became interested in 1979 the company disliked the word "magic" and wanted to call it Rubik's Cube, a decision that insured a measure of prosperity for the professor.

Rubik is now said to be no longer worried about his financial status, and will soon bring out Rubik's Magic Snake, consisting of 24 half-cubes. Singmaster says the snake is really more a "fiddly" than a puzzle, and he is more interested in other expected Rubik puzzles - a cube with 4 cubelets per face, and one with 16 cubelets per face.

Cube Cartoons

Meanwhile, cube lore grows. A student at Southampton University claimed he had failed his exams because of the cube. A father reported that to preserve domestic bliss he had to get a cube for each member of the family. A young man said a young woman he had known for some time brought him a cube and promised to marry him when he solved it. He did and she did. On the other hand, cube divorce has also been noted.

There is a proliferation of cube cartoons, especially in West Germany. One shows workers arriv ing at a factory and being frisked; the caption: "Order from the management: Cubes must be turned in before the beginning of work." Another shows a man arriving home at the end of the day to find his wife amid a clutter of housecleaning equip-"What - 6 o'clock alment: ready? - L, ah, tried the cube just once after breakfast."

From 1952 until his death in 1965, Sir Winston Churchill was dazzled by a young woman — the queen of England, says a writer who worked for both. A photograph of Queen Elizabeth hung above the prime minister's bed. and the weekly meetings between the two were unusually long, ac-cording to Sir John Colville, who was Churchill's private secretary during World War II and secretary to Elizabeth before she assumed the throne in 1952 at age 25. "He was an old man whose passions were spent, but there is no doubt that, at a respectful distance, he fell in love with the queen," says Colville in his book, The Chur-chillians." "I do not think that he was a man with strong sexual desires and those that he had were, in due course, concentrated in his love for his wife," Colville said.

The White House has sent wooden, pastel-colored eggs to congressmen, ambassadors and President Reagan's Cabinet to sign and return for its annual Easter egg roll April 20. Sheila Patton, press secretary to Nancy Reagan, said the blue, pink and yellow eggs will be hidden on the White House lawn for youngsters to find and keep. Reagan and Vice President George Bush also will sign eggs. The Easter egg roll attracted 18,000 people last year, according to the White House visitors office.

Jihan Sadat, wife of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, says she and her Israeli counterpart share "the joy that we no longer see the tragic disabilities caused by war" between their nations. Mrs. Sadat and Ofira Navon, wife of Israeli President Yitzhak Navou, accepted awards in New York for their work in the rehabilitation of the handicapped. The occasion was the 25th iversary dinner of the World Rehabilitation Fund. Mrs. Sadat was honored for her work in establishing a rehabilitation center in Cairo, while Mrs. Navon was honored for her aid in establishing a
